Discussion Topics: This course covers the first one hundred years of sociological theorizing from the 1830s to the 1930s. The classical tradition of sociological thought emerged from the writings of leading theorists during that period. Among these theorists are Karl Marx, Max Weber, and Emile Durkheim. The course examines the earliest concepts, theories, and methods of sociology found in the writings of these thinkers. Through a focused reading, critical analysis, in-depth class discussion, historical investigation, and film materials we will compare and contrast their thoughts on the processes of capital accumulation and restructuring of social classes, the organization of state power and political alliances, social inequality, as well as the possibility of social cohesion. Throughout the semester this course will provide a forum to rethink politics and address historical and global dimensions of social change by making connections to todays world and by exploring alternatives to the Euro-centrism often found in these theories.
